

Frankly, I think crisis hotlines (and the people who call them) are going to be more affected by this than ACP. Suicide hotlines, Domestic Violence hotlines, etc. get a lot more pay phone calls than ACP does. And many of the programs that provide these "hotlines" are in worse financial shape than ACP. It seems to me that the increased costs would place undue hardship on the people who need access to toll-free crisis intervention.